The Indianapolis Star says, "the churches should stay out of politics." The Star has another thick coming. It seems to think the proper business of church members is to sit in high back pews, sing sweet psalms, dream of the New Jerusalem from which they will go at the rest of the world burning in hell and listen to disquisitions on infant damnation and Jonah's whale. While they are doing this the politicians and editors whose calling and election is to run the government will look after the ordering of affairs outside. The men who make profession of politics will determine largely through legislation the environment of the churches. According to the Star's way of thinking, the business of the churches is to let the politicians, often in league with vice-machines, determine whether or not institutions which turn men down faster than the churches can build them up, shall continue to exist and even control the life of the community. This is a fine old moss-covered theory of the function of religion, but unfortunately for the politicians who are trying to keep it going, church people are very generally mixing a little brains with their religion and refuse to accept the doctrine that politics should be a field of activity open to the special interest of the avenging politician out closed to organizing prompted by altruism and ideals in their attitude toward social order. The Star is "off its feed," as we horsemen say.—Danville Messenger.

SCHOOLS

Mr. O. G. Whiz wants to know and says, also, why is the consolidated school so much better than a common school? If you take an interest in it? That's it: Mr. Whiz struck it. It's the interest in any and every kind of school, but in Indiana the records show 50 per cent attendance in district schools and practically 100 per cent on consolidated schools, the same compulsory law for both kinds. Children can't be compelled to attend school when there are 100 children in the district and house accommodation for only 50. What can the truancy officer do? I expect one reason why the consolidated schools are better attended is the same reason that urged Mr. Whiz and myself when we were boys to walk a mile to get to ride one-half a mile. The children all like to ride and they like it, and the more they go the more they want to go. Mr. McFerran's last plan of having the county borrow $500,000 over the houses and equipments all put the county in first-class condition, with high schools accessible in each district, is better than the consolidated or graded system. For instance, there is Highland Park with its graded school of no benefit to the rest of the county, and its assessment not subject to county taxation, but the tax will constantly increase, and if the voters of Buchel build themselves a graded school, they commence with a 25 cent tax and a poll tax in addition, and the tax will increase from year to year and the Buchel will be cut off from the county assessment. The county assessment for schools is 20 cents for school purposes, and Buchel, if it should adopt the graded school, immediately pays a 5 cent greater rate and next year Jeffersontown, Middletown, Prospect, Valley Station and various other sections of the county may set up graded schools and cut their assessments from the rate of the county, but at the expense of increased taxation.

Mr. McFerran's plan values the present tax and gives ample school privileges to the whole county. Mr. Whiz is right. Why shouldn't everyone in the county take interest in the school system and study it up, and if the consolidated system is the best, adopt it? If Mr. McFerran's is the best, adopt it. If it gives the schools at once and cuts the present rate of school tax in two.

I am sure if neither of the plans suggested please the people, let a better one be suggested, and Mr. Kemp and Mr. Whiz, it is up to you to do it. We shall have the $400,000 pay this year and next year, and as Mr. Whiz says also, why if we pay this tax, should we not take equal interest in having the money spent for the best purposes and for the greatest good of the children of the county? Why? Why? Why? and why hadn't all of us rather see good schools, well equipped, with room and to spare for all the children of the county than as they are now, or an isolated good one here and there in the county?

Why do we want to pay double taxes for half the benefit Mr. McFerran's plan will give? Let everybody in the county say why?

Very truly yours,
HORACE W. MOREHEAD.

CHAPTER XXXIV.
Room-mates.

Let us go back to the time when Nina and Gladys were still at school. Let us take a peep into Nina's room at the seminary and make the acquaintance of her roommate, Delia Vincent. We will give a minute description of her as she is to play a part in the future chapters. Delia and Nina were fast friends and shared each other's secrets as our chums at school invariably do. They were about the same age, but totally unlike in disposition as well as in social standing. For while Nina was the daughter of a comparatively poor farmer, Delia was the only child of a Philadelphia millionaire; and while Nina was the staidest, proudest girl in school, Delia was just the reverse. There was not a girl in school who did not love the young heiress and she knew turned them all. Her disposition was quiet, gentle and refined, but she could be as merry as the merriest when she chose. Delia was a pretty, after a fashion, but not beautiful. Her hair was black as an Indian's and long and straight. Her complexion was very dark. A face of infinite sweetness, smooth as satin, and not a particle of color save in the cherry red lips. Eyes of a deep, dark gray, that were mirrors to the soul and could look you in the face with an unflinching, steady gaze, that some people found hard to meet.

One day, just three weeks previous to graduating day, Nina and Delia were sitting through the long, dreary, lamenting that the near future would part them, as they were both to graduate and leave the school this term. Delia seemed to have some thing upon her mind, and ever and anon would turn her eyes upon Nina with a mute, questioning gaze, that seemed to say, "I wonder if I can trust her." Nina noted Delia's preoccupied ways and queer glances and knew there was something which she wished to tell, but was undecided whether or not to do so. Throwing her arm lovingly about Delia, she said:

"What is it, Delia, dear? I know you have something to tell me, for I can see it in your eyes."

"Yes, Nina, my eyes betray me. Walter says they sometimes speak plainer than my lips," she answered with a smile.

"And who is Walter, pray?" questioned Delia.

"O, I forgot," she stammered, "you do not know Walter. And—Nina, can you keep a great secret?"

"Keep a secret?" said Nina in an injured tone. "Dear me, Delia, we have not always shared each other's secrets. What a question to ask me!"

"Now do not be vexed, dear," coaxed Delia. "To be sure we have always shared each other's little secrets, but this is a great one, and concerns someone besides myself. I would have told you sooner, but I asked me not to tell anyone, and—and—oh, Nina, I just must tell you all about it, and bid you good-bye. For, Nina, instead of waiting until the close of the term, I leave the seminary tonight. I am going to elope with Walter Lyon and we are to be married!"

"To be married!" exclaimed Nina, in utter astonishment. "And you never told me until today, Delia Vincent, how could you?"

"There now! I knew you would be vexed because I did not tell you sooner," said Delia, her lips begin-ning to tremble, "and—oh dear, I wish I had listened to Walter and told no one, now that you are angry with me," she concluded with a burst of tears.

"Come, Delia, do not cry, dear. You know I cannot be angry with you, but I am so astonished. The idea of your marrying, why it is preposterous! How did you ever manage to plan it all without being found out by this Walter of yours?"

"Well, I will," she replied, "if you will promise not to betray me to Madam or any of the girls."

"I promise," said Nina.

"Well," said Delia, "Walter and I have been acquainted since last fall. You remember the day we went to the party in that first wet weather? I had wandered off from the rest of the party in quest of wild flowers and lost my way. You may be sure I was badly frightened and tried to find my way out. But trying and getting out are two things. After wandering about for more than an hour, I gave up in desperation, and upon a log and began to cry, like the little niny ny. Presently I was startled by the sound of footsteps near and, looking up, saw two young men coming toward me. They both carried cases containing sketching materials and as I rightly surmised were artists.

"Seeing my distress one of them inquired the cause of my grief. Upon being told, they offered to conduct me to Fern Glen where you remember the rest of my party was. I very thankfully accepted them as guides, and upon the way we became very well acquainted. Walter Lyon took Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

and where I went to school. "We were near Fern Glen when I heard Madam calling the girls to get ready for the morning. I thanked the gentlemen and dismissed them, not wishing the Madam to see them and give me the appearance of her roommate, Delia Vincent. We will give a minute description of her as she is to play a part in the future chapters. Delia and Nina were fast friends and shared each other's secrets as our chums at school invariably do. ## ST. MATTHEWS.

Honor to The First Grandson of The House of Arterburn.

More About French Licks—Appreciate R. O. D.—Wheat Threshing About Completed—News Notes by A. B. C.

St. Matthews, August 8.—According to promise I will make a few more statements about French Lick. The good results from that place are still being felt and enjoyed. It is, indeed, a twentieth century "Post of Silem," which cures or mitigates all diseases. This "spring" situated in the most beautiful park, so cool and shady and real fun to sit at once feel a repose of mind as if all burdens were laid aside, which in itself is curative. Now, it's not exactly in this article to learn or to advertise the "springs," but we need to give credit to the place which has done so much to encourage anyone who aims to reach a medical water to go there.

The boulevard on either side of the depot at St. Matthews has been improved to such an extent it cannot be called a pile here. Our worthy Magistrate has really added a grand piece to the city's piece of work. We certainly appreciate R. O. D. more than words can express.

The store is on duty along its route, giving an exceptionally fine price to Mr. and Mrs. N. Arterburn last week. Many of us know by experience what a desirable addition a grandson is to one family; we begin by being very proud when daddy is giving us this love for our own increases as time goes by, so when the second crop arrives which doubly our own, we throw ourselves into the arms of daddy and declare him to be the "greatest thing ever." These conditions are apparent in every household, but what must be to occupy the position of first grandson in the house of Arterburn!

Notwithstanding rain has poured at intervals for weeks, threshing is about completed, owing to the excellent quality of machines. The "Unity" has regulated prices in a very satisfactory manner to all parties, and farmers now realize, even at this early date, the importance of standing together.

"Springing" folks cling tenaciously to the old adage, "If a first son don't succeed, try, try again," so they will begin bemoaning another well in a few days about a hundred feet from the other failure. There would be little accomplished in this life if we became discouraged and gave up every time results were unsatisfactory.

The health of this community at present is excellent, for which we are very thankful, and feel that it should be reported as such. The Jeffersonian is our mouthpiece, as well as a repository of trials, an expression of our wants, a comfort and advantage in many ways. How can any one afford to be without it? Is the burning question asked for consideration?

SMART KENTUCKY GIRLS

Will Display Results of Their House work at the State Fair.

The High School girls of Kentucky to have their inning at the State Fair, held in Louisville September 12-17. The fair management has decided to learn just what progress has been made in the domestic arts and sciences by the school girls, and it is probable that there will not be a more interesting exhibit at this year's big show than the examples of handiwork of Kentucky girls.

Liberal prizes have been offered for everything from a link skis and fancy apron to best one dozen button holes. The girls who can make the best muffins and doughnuts and make the best lemon pie, will also be rewarded for her skill and industry. This new department will be in direct charge of Miss Evelyn Porter, of Louisville, as superintendent, with Miss Eva N. McGrew, of Bayou, and Annie Ruthford, of Louisville, as assistants.

A classy looking letter head was attention and took the recipient into a pleasant frame of mind for the letter underneath. We Print That Kind of Stationery. We Are Ready to Print Yours.
